

Satellite radio should not be prohibited from providing weather and traffic stations. When travelling it is nice to know that one can tune into a station that provides travel and weather information on a constant basis. While some stations provide traffic information, a visitor does not know which am or fm station to tune into to obtain such information, nor the time interval at which the information is broadcast.

There is an advantage to be able to listen to the traffic and weather for the next city to be reached. Some times a change in route is indicated prior to being in range of a local station.

XM radios new service should not be prohibited by the government.
